Chapter 1 by Elden

It was a rainy night in August, when little boy Timmy, was walking his dog. Now Timmy was only 7, but he cared greatly for his pet dog, Bow-Wow. Timmy was skipping happily through the rain thinking: "What could get better than this?" and Bow-Wow was equally as jovial. Suddenly, there was a BANG and Timmy was lying down on the floor, leaking red stuff from his head. Bow-Wow's instincts immediately kicked in and realized: "Master is dead." He had only one thought rushing in his head now. Revenge.

Chapter 2 by LethalPianist

Bow wow was no normal dog.
He was a magical one. A talking magical one, at that.
He was smart. He was determined.

And he WILL find the killer.

Rowan had caught a glimpse of the murderer's scent, but that was more than enough for his canine senses. He had once done a stint in a Russian KGB jail in Siberia. There was no question about it. He was a pro.

Oh no, he thought.

It's the cats again.

Chapter 3 by SaintSayaka

Two hours and a pile of cat guts later, Bow Wow found himself no closer to a solution. He grabbed a cigarette from a police officer - who offered no protest, what with his slit throat - and smoked, contemplating the situation.

Man's best friend was going to get some answers, but not here.

Chapter 4 by Gounaitory

Smoking the cigarette didn't helped Bow Wow to get the solution, but he had that skills to feel. Yes, he had the thing that is called an intuition. He had the strongest intuition a dog can ever have.

Passing near the house, which was close to the rail station he saw the man...

Chapter 5 by KlausBaudelaire

The man who had started it all. His old handler. This couldn't be a coincidence.

Bow Wow ducked into an alley to avoid the observant eye of the man he spent 2 years with. He didn't want to... no, he couldn't make contact. But he needed information.

But how do you avoid being caught by someone who taught you everything you know?
